

EXPANSION SHOCK

Norton Museum of Art

Koto · 2023 · Container

A Norman Foster expansion delivered the building. The brand spoke in a dozen voices.

Programming, development, and marketing had each accumulated their own visual language. The fragmentation was operational, not aesthetic.

A frame, not a logo.

A modular geometric frame derived from the museum's own architectural proportions. Color belongs to the frame, never the content inside it, so exhibition palettes coexist without conflict. It scales from app icon to gallery wall.

The brand does not compete with the art. It frames the art.

Coherence comes from structural geometry, not visual repetition.

The frame is the one consistent variable. Every show changes what sits inside it; the geometry never moves. That is why it holds.

Brand is behavior, not image.

Nine landmark cultural rebrands, read by what forced the decision. Not by how they look. By what they do.
